

INFORMATION ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Maria-Adriana Deiana holds a doctorate from the School of Politics, International Studies and Philosophy, Queen's University, Belfast on gender and citizenship in the transition from conflict to peace. She has carried out extensive research on the legacy of conflict in both Bosnia-Herzegovina and Northern Ireland. Her research interests include debates on citizenship, the relationship between gender, ethnicity and nationalism, the gender dynamics of conflict transformation, peacebuilding and post-conflict reconstruction; feminism(s) in Eastern Europe and particularly in the Former Yugoslavia. She also has an interest in Postcolonial and Post-State Socialism studies. Maria has written on gender and citizenship in post-Dayton Bosnia-Herzegovina and is currently undertaking research on women and civil society in post-Good-Friday-Agreement Northern Ireland.

Roz Goldie leads Roz Goldie Partnership providing research, evaluation and strategic consultancy on conflict transformation, equality, and organisational change. Formerly a lecturer, broadcaster, and manager she teaches public service management in Queen's University Belfast School of Management. She is evaluating educational three three-year projects funded by the Big Lottery and the Atlantic Philanthropies, and was co-investigator in the University of Surrey study on the seriously injured in the Northern Ireland conflict.

Geneviève Parent is Assistant Professor of Conflict Studies at Saint-Paul University in Ottawa. She specializes in victimology, victims of violence, and research methods. Specifically, her research interests include phenomenology, victims' rights, victims of armed conflicts (especially genocide), the effects of mass violence on individuals and communities, and questions of healing, transitional justice, and reconciliation in peace-building practices. Her publications include a co-edited book Peacebuilding, Memory and Reconciliation: Bridging Top-Down and Bottom-up Approaches (2012).

Andrea Kathryn Talentino is Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Professor of Political Science at Norwich University. She is the author of Military Intervention After the Cold War has written numerous articles on intervention and peacebuilding. Her current research examines inter-organizational cooperation in military intervention.

David E. Toohey is a Visiting Assistant Professor at Aichi University and a researcher at the Aichi University Institute for International Affairs in Nogaya, Japan. His research areas include environmental politics, immigration, and media. He is the author of a book entitled Borderlands Media: Cinema and Literature as Opposition to the Oppression of Immigrants (2012). He has published in Asian Cultural Studies, Review of Policy Research.